Democratic organs all over the country are rejoicing at Labor Commissioner Peck's retirement from office. These able journals forget, however, that Peck's figures are still talking Protection.

A contemporary observer, regarding the nomination of Judge Jackson, that "Cleveland could not have done better." Certainly not—probably not as well. But who is crazy enough to suppose that, in any exigency, Mr. Cleveland would have named a man outside of his party?

The "moral forces" that Mr. Cleveland appears to be bringing to bear upon Democratic members of the present Congress have a remarkably close resemblance to the "moral forces" employed at Albany by David B. Hill. The Mugwumps, however, "ain't sayin" a word.

The Senatorial fight in Wisconsin ended with a dull, sickening thud for Bragg, the mau who loved Grover Cleveland for the enemies he had made. It seems that while all the sentimental influences of politics were arrayed in favor of Bragg, they weren't enough to outweigh the shining, bimetallic arguments of the other fellow.

"I am the State," declared Louis XIV, when a Judge happened to speak in his presence of "the King and the State." Mr. Cleveland is evidently possessed of a similar idea. Although his own administration does not begin for a month yet, he is already endeavoring to absorb all three functions of the Federal Government. It would be much more decorous in him to follow the discreet example of Brer Rabbit and "lay low" for the present.

According to a late census bulletin the Protestant Episcopal Church has made rapid progress in the United States during the past half century. The first clergyman of the denomination to set foot in America came over with Sir Walter Raleigh in 1587. Down to the Revolution the church made steady progress and had many parishes and clergymen throughout New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland and Virginia, but it was almost crushed out in the struggle for independence. It was slow in regaining its lost ground, but is now in a flourishing and growing condition. It has 532,064 communicants, divided into 5,019 organizations, with a church for each.

Democratic journals are trying to accustom their readers to the idea of a tariff on sugar, tea and coffee. They have not, as a rule, yet reached the point where they dare openly to discuss this tax on the poor man's breakfast table, but they will come to it in due season. In the meantime their news and semi-editorial columns are paving the way for such a course by judicious discussion of the practicability of the duties in question. The need of revenue is dilated upon, and prominent men are quoted as favoring this means of raising it. Perhaps the most significant of all is that which appeared lately in a Democratic daily of New York City, declaring that the proposed whiskey tax was impracticable, but that "coffee and tea, which are altogether imported, are ideal subjects of revenue tariff taxation." Of course no one with an intelligent grasp of the tariff question ever doubted this.

SHARPS county is in excellent financial shape. The report of the Chairman of the County Sinking Fund shows that the last dollar of the county's bonded debt of $150,000, incurred in 1868, was paid during 1892, and that the county has no further use for a sinking fund.

SHARPS county is on hand to every dollar of obligation for any other purpose, leaving the county absolutely free of debt.

An inventor in Cleveland has made a tricycle, the spokes in the drive wheels of which are paddles, while the little wheel, covered with sheet iron or a web of rubber-covered cloth, serves as the rubber.

Underneath the axle and about four inches from the ground are four pointers about six feet long and two feet apart, like the hulls of a catamaran. This machine can be run on land or water. On land it goes at rapid speeds, says the inventor, than the ordinary one and on water, propelled as rapidly as a row boat.

"KILLARYN and the Rhine," a romantic comedy drama in four acts, was given at the Academy of Music last night. The title gives an idea of the play. "Conrad" is a German boy playing a knight errant character in Ireland. J. E. Toole took the role of "Conrad." He sang and talked in Dutch dialect to perfection. He danced and played the character of a friend and defender of women in all dialects. Miss Joan Craven took the serious part of "Rose Delaney" and played the part of the injured man with skill. Miss Minnie Jarboe was charming as the witty and sprightly Irish maid, "Rilly O'Shane." William Bank, Joseph Keefe and Charles Brandon played their respective roles with intelligence and care.—Pittsburgh Post, Wilmington, Del., December 23rd, 1892.

BUT little remains of the old prison-pen at Andersonville. There are only a few half rotted posts left to mark the line of the stockade, and a few low earthworks where the gates were. Some of the wells and tunnels dug by prisoners who hoped to escape thereby are still to be seen. The grounds are now the property of the Grand Army of the Republic.

FOR obstinate lamp wicks: Sometimes the wick will seem firmly wedged at one side, while the other runs up in a point. To overcome this depravity, take a new wick, draw out a thread near the selvage, and the wick will be found quite tractable when introduced into the burner. The cap will take it up properly, and it will appear in good form and give an even flame when lighted.

THE House into which Lincoln was carried when assassinated, and in which he bled, possesses such historic interest that Congress has been petitioned to purchase it and establish it as a permanent memorial. The amount asked for to buy this and additional relics is $35,000. Among the signers of the petition are Chief Justice Melville, W. Fuller, General John M. Schofield, and Secretary John W. Foster.

"LITTLE WOMEN."

A charming story dramatized and to be presented by Home Talent.

A pretty story is sought after by all readers; the greatest minds work out plots which give entertainment to all classes; the imagination soars to the unknown fields, gathering matter which, when put into words form the fiction of our time, not the least difficult is to write for the young such stories as will permit normal development of the child or to give healthful amusement.

To a few American writers has this mind been given, and the gentle sea stands most prominent in the field. Miss Alcott, by her charming pen, has given to this generation many beautiful stories. "Little Women," possibly, leads her books. In that it contains a well rounded plot which is found moral, strengthening powers and sweet, sympathetic action, thus performing the double office of instruction and amusement.

The stage is used often to elevate and indelibly stamp upon the mind right action. With such an idea in view did Miss Little Wood use her talents in dramatizing "Little Women." She has made the most of the material and will present it to our people in the Opera-house Friday night. A large crowd is assured by the number of seats already sold. However, there are a few left, and that none may miss so pleasing an entertainment this notice is written, and all to attend. A male quartette will render beautiful songs and two young ladies will sing a comic duet. Street cars will run East and West after the performance for the accommodation of those living in the ends of our city. Gallery 10 cents, balcony 15 cents, down stairs 50 cents, no extra charge for reserved seats. Seats on sale at Nelson's.

GAMBLING.

Time Star!—In a recent and gambling meeting in New York Rev. Dr. J. L. Scudder said: "I don't believe in gambling on election! If so, I have come to denounce you, for you are a gambler." Another speaker, with equal bluntness, asked: "Have you ever played for a progressive end prize? If so, I have come to denounce you as a gambler." And he might have added, the world is a world of gamblers. If we go out in this kind of weather without our umbrella we gamble on the prospect of landing our new suit home without its being blown away. We gamble when we board a railroad train, when we go into a street car or a private carriage. We even gamble on the purity of the milk we drink and we generally have a brace same played against us in that, too. We gamble when we enter into almost every business transaction, and what is a game of hazard but a game of gambling?

Just at present it is worth while to pay some attention to the recent economic history of New South Wales, the latest country which, having suffered from the policy of Trade Exemption. Free-trade, has repudiated it in favor of Protection.

It is remarkable how closely the experience of the Australian colony resembles our own under the last trial the United States made of Cobdenism. By 1860 the Revenue Tariffs of 1846 and 1867 had impoverished the country, destroyed public credit and sowed the seeds of discontent among the laboring population. The public Treasury was bankrupt and Congress was obliged to authorize loans in order to provide money to pay running expenses. Even then funds could hardly be raised to pay the salaries of the Government officials, and the bonds offered for sale had to be hawked about at disgraceful discounts and enormous rates of interest.

New South Wales found itself in a similar position in 1861 after her experience of a Free-trade policy. Strikes were frequent and labor generally discontented. The public debt had grown to enormous proportions, and the revenues fell short of expenditures. Within three months a loan of £4,000,000 negotiated in London was expended, and distrust in the colony's solvency made further borrowing impracticable. The public had reached a critical point when the colonial Parliament was dissolved. The result of the ensuing election was to give the Protectionists a substantial majority in that body.

A new Tariff bill was forthwith framed. Describing its scope and objects, Treasurer Lyle in an address to the House, declared that it was a measure for the benefit of native industry instead of "for the good of cheaply paid foreign labor." It was a genuinely protective Tariff, he asserted, so adjusted as to extend "agriculture and manufactures and give employment to the people at a better rate of pay and at the same time keep the money in the country."

The bill was promptly passed and gave New South Wales a Tariff as radically protective in principle as our own McKinley law. It was a severe blow to British Free-traders. For years this British colony had enjoyed the distinction of being the sole companion of the mother country in adhering to Cobdenism, and the advocates of that system even contended that it was more prosperous than the neighboring colony of Victoria, which had a Protective Tariff. But the people of New South Wales have effectually settled this question to the discomfiture of the Free-traders everywhere.

REMARKING upon a paragraph in a recent issue of The Manufacturer, reporting the shipment of 300 tons of charcoal pig iron from Buffalo, N. Y., to Derby, England, a correspondent in Chicago thinks the reason why such exports are practicable should be more explicitly stated. "Wood for fuel is exceedingly scarce and dear in England, and charcoal iron is consequently scarce and high there also."

An English Fair-trader writing to The Sheffield Telegraph thinks it a grand mistake to suppose that the election of Cleveland will bring about freetrade in this country. He says also that the supposition that the Free-trade loves Free-trade is absurd. What he loves is to possess "the power to buy what he wants for less money than his fellow-countrymen can produce it and live." The name Free-trade, "is only a fair name hiding something which is not fair."

ALONG with Free-trade there would naturally come a smaller production of cotton in America, because the low price would discourage production. With the reduction of the cotton crop there would come a larger production of food crops, and consequently lower prices of bread. But would this benefit the country generally? Let us see. If the cotton crop is reduced the manufacturing industry from the same cause would be reduced. The supply of labor, adequate under previous conditions, becomes excessive; demand for labor becomes less, fewer are employed, at lower wages, and there is less money with which to buy the larger bread crop, and fewer consumers to take it. Unless, therefore, there is a foreign demand for breadstuffs, the producer will not have been benefited, and the laborer will have been incalculably injured.

How it Became Popular.
When people find an article much superior to anything of the kind they have ever before used, they are almost sure to tell their friends about it, and especially if they know of some friends needing such an article. Dealers also soon learn the true value of their goods, and when they have an article of unusual merit they will almost invariably mention the fact to their customers. This accounts in a great measure for the large sale on Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. Here is an instance: W. L. Needham, a prominent citizen and business man of Oremburg, Mo., has been selling Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for several years and recommends it to his customers, because in his experience it has proven to be the best for cough, cold and whooping-cough. He says it is the most popular medicine that he handles, and gives the best satisfaction. Fifty cent bottles for sale by Power & Reynolds, druggists.
